

National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment

An increasingly cold northeasterly flow will affect eastern and central England. Troughs arriving from the east will bring a wintry mix of showers to many parts early on Thursday, falling onto locally sub-zero surfaces, giving a risk of icy stretches. Showers will turn increasingly to snow during Thursday as the colder air arrives. The snow showers should become largely confined to the southeast later on Thursday where they may continue into the early hours of Friday.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Snow and Ice

Valid from 00:05 on Thu, 05th Feb 2015 until 23:55 on Thu, 05th Feb 2015

A wintry mix of sleet and snow showers are likely to extend inland across parts of eastern, southeastern and central England on Wednesday night into Thursday. These are likely to lead to icy stretches on untreated surfaces. Localised snow accumulations of 1-3 cm are also possible but amounts of snow, as yet, remain uncertain, with many places probably missing the snow.

The public should be aware of the potential for disruption to travel.
